Heber City seeks right to power

HEBER CITY — Bureau of Reclamation officials recently announced that they will not include any hydraulic power units in construction of Jordanelle Dam.

Ray Farrell, superintendent of Heber Light and Power, has announced that Bingham Engineering will file an application for the rights to Jordanelle power for Heber.

Larry Fluharty, Chief of the Planning Division for the BOR, said the bureau's policy has always been to install facilities to provide only that power which is needed for their own use during construction. He said in the case of the Jordanelle Project, the bureau plans to use Diamond Fork power and, if necessary, will install some facilities at Jordanelle. Plans are not yet final but they will pick whichever power is the least expensive, he said.

Fluharty said the BOR is working with the Western Area Power Administration of the Department of Energy to develop a schedule for marketing Jordanelle power and will build the dam to accommodate non-government installations.

Everyone will have an equal opportunity to apply. He added that it will be cost-effective for whomever obtains the rights, he said.

Heber City mayor stands firm on airport renovation plans

HEBER CITY — The Heber City Council had finalized plans and obtained funding from the Federal Aeronautics Administration to rebuild the present Heber Airport runway when the Bi-County Transportation Commission, representing Wasatch and Summit County recreational interests, presented a proposal to move the airport to the northern sector of the county.

The commission's proposal was based on information that the present location is not suitable for extensions necessary to serve jets which would qualify it as a reliever airport for Salt Lake air traffic.

The commission also recommended moving the airport so quality aggregate beneath it would be available for Jordanelle Dam and new highway construction. Members consider availability of the aggregate to be a factor in successfully applying for funds to extend the abandoned Union Pacific line from Park City to the airport site for transportation of the material.

Heber Mayor Gordon Mendenhall has remained firm in his determination to go ahead with planned improvements on the present runway next spring, based on information from Ron Theobald, director of the Utah State Aeronautics Administration, that if the runway is moved, the allocated FAA funds will be lost.

Mayor Mendenhall and county commission chairman Pete Coleman discussed the matter with Homer Chandler, representing the Mountainlands Association of Governments, Monday. Chandler had just returned from meeting with FAA representatives in Denver.

Chandler said, "I conveyed the intent of the Bi-County Commission and Heber City to maintain the airport at its present location and to improve it ... that in the future they would like to tie the airport into other developments in the area ... expand or relocate it, if that is feasible."
